Overview

The Office of Food for Peace in USAID's Bureau's for Democracy, Conflict, and Humanitarian Assistance is the largest provider of food assistance in the world. FFP annually provides close to $2 billion of food assistance, including in-kind Title II food assistance. FFP has complemented its provision of Title II in-kind food aid with the Emergency Food Security Program, valued at over $300 million annually, which allows for local and regional purchase of food outside of the United States and closer to the emergency setting, as well as market based approaches such as cash transfer or food voucher programs that facilitate access to food.

FFP Regional Office Overview

The Regional Food for Peace Office (RFFPO) provides monitoring and technical assistance (TA) to Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Madagascar, Malawi, Mozambique, Namibia, South Africa, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe (USAID/SA client missions) on all issues related to food security with an annual budget of approximately $90 million. This TA includes both developmental assistance to address the region's chronic malnutrition and emergency assistance to respond to acute malnutrition and food security shocks. Three of these countries have a Food for Peace (FFP) presence. Additionally, the RFFPO also is responsible for: a) developing FFP training programs for USAID staff; b) providing guidance to FFP/Washington on policy and prioritization for programming resources in the region; c) liaising with other donors and actors operating in the region on FFP-related matters, such as USAID's Famine Early Warning System; and d) monitoring and managing the FFP Prepositioned Food Warehouse in Durban and the Quarterly Web-Interface Commodity Reporting System.

Development Programs Overview

Food for Peace has a total of six development programs, with two implementing partners in Madagascar (ADRA and CRS, each program operational from 2014 - 2019) Malawi (CRS and PCI, each program operational from 2014 - 2019), and Zimbabwe (CNFA and WV, each program operational from 2013 - 2018). The total amount of development resources for each country is approximately $100 million over a five year period. These programs are designed to improve availability, access and utilization of food. This is done through interventions such as improving agricultural production and value chains, micro-credit, maternal and child health, nutrition, water and sanitation, safety-net and disaster risk and also reduction programs.

Emergency Program Overview

Food for Peace's emergency funding and programs address acute malnutrition and save lives in times of crises whether man made or natural through in-kind, voucher and cash based food assistance. In 2015 FFP has responded with approximately $53 million in cash and in-kind resources to drought and flooding in Madagascar, Mozambique Malawi and Zimbabwe. In addition to life saving measures, emergency programs may include activities to include the prevention of malnutrition and activities to build resilience. The lifesaving assistance FFP provides can also help to stabilize fragile situations and build resilience in vulnerable populations. The World Food Program is the largest recipient of these FFP emergency programs.
